Comments: Limiting establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" is unenforceable. Who gets to determine where new climbing routes get to be established? Will the act of wilderness climbing be commodified? Who will enforce the establishment of new routes, and what will be done if someone creates a new route in an area that is not an "existing climbing opportunity"? I really don't see the point of this, it seems like a band aid fix that does not take into consideration the thoughts and feelings of people who actually do wilderness climbing.
