Comments: Banning fixed anchors that have taken years of research and community work to set up will make it harder for climbers to keep the climbing routes safe and maintained, which is a job the climbing community takes seriously. Sometimes, when it comes to safety, quick decisions need to be made, and we shouldn't have to wait for permission to make those calls. We want to make sure that fixed anchors are replaced safely and that we don't lose access to great climbing routes in the process.
