Comments: Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers. Non-Wilderness climbing management policy should maintain opportunities for new anchors unless and until analyses determine climbing should be restricted to protect cultural and natural resources.

Adding bureaucracy to these areas will cause confusion, tension, and loss of revenue if climbing areas are shut down and put into waiting periods for federal review. That means even less funding to USFS if tourism decreased. Please reconsider or amend.
