Comments: I do not agree with or approve of the proposed directive of classifying fixed bolts, slings, nuts, and or pitons as installations. Rock climbing is a recognized recreation. People are suppose to be able to use wilderness land for recreation and educational purposes. Along with many other reasons as well. Granted I do not approve of grid-bolting and the scaring of a mountain face. But by imposing this turn of phrase, or language to deem fixed anchors as installations you are hindering peoples ability to recreate safely. You take away the historic value that climbing has instilled in these wilderness areas. The point of wilderness areas is to promote awareness of the other living creatures that exist with us on this planet. The ecosystems that we rely on to maintain a living. If people are not allowed to safely travel through vertical terrain to find this meaning and the profound purpose it holds for current and future affairs, you are denying our right to use public lands as stated in the wilderness act of 1964.
