Comments: I think this is well-intentioned but misguided. Just about any climber will agree that bolting and other anchor management should be properly regulated to preserve wilderness areas, this policy is far too restrictive and the USFS will almost certainly lack the capacity to actually enforce it without banning climbing outright. It's very disappointing to see such shortsightedness from the USFS and I hope a better solution is found. Please refer to the American Alpine Club's comments on this for a much more thorough analysis of the flaws in this policy.
