Comments: Climbers do not damage the wilderness echo system as proven by decades and decades of climbing in virtually all natural forest areas. Deciding now to go completely up-end a system that currently does not create environmental damage is asinine. Climbing's impacts are imperceivable when compared to other activities that are allowed (e.g. logging, off-roading, dirtbiking, horse back riding, etc.). This about face on a community of people that have the it's respect for the natural world is a slap in the face to that community.
