Comments: I am greatly opposed to this. It increases risk and danger. It limits opportunities for people to feel alive, there are people who stay alive so they can use fixed anchors and climb, connect with the wilderness and themselves, move with respect in nature. I am so tired. I have tried researching to come up with a good comment and I am exhausted which brings the point- why is the government putting this much time, money, man hours effort; to massively affect many people's lives in seriously negative ways? There are so many more positive, helpful, building opportunities to create havens in the wild and maintain beautiful places with respect, it doesn't make sense to try to destroy things that support so many people. It seems ridiculous to have to put energy to say this is a divisive idea that will cause chaos and harm instead of uniting the people who love the wilderness most to protect and respect it deeper
