Comments: I have gained an immense appreciation for the beauty of the American wilderness ever since I first started climbing and canyoneering. Fixed anchors have allowed me to experience remote areas of the US such as City of Rocks, Idaho, Indian Creek, Utah, and feel safe doing so. This wouldn't be possible without a steady team of crag volunteers constantly inspecting and replacing fixed gear as it wears with use. We should not be making life harder for the climbing community. This community has taught me principles I live by, such as leave no trace, and respect the natural habitat. It has allowed me to experience the best of America and as a show of my appreciation I do not hesitate to support the organizations dedicated to nurturing the land for the people to enjoy.
