Comments: Bolts should not require MRAs, they are an insanely burdensome bureaucratic hurdle.

I would like to see the USFS continue to allow bolting and/or the installation of fixed hardware as seen fit by the individual climbers establishing a route.

However I personally despise excessive bolting in wilderness and I think that when the USFS determines an area to be excessively bolted it should obviously retain the ability to put hyper-local temporary moratoriums on bolting and/or issue bans on those who violate these moratoriums or continually install excessive amounts of fixed hardware. These bans would need to be subject to public review
