Comments: We all know the damage that was done at the end of the 19th and beginning of the 20th century as our country was being developed. Many old growth forests were decimated as the habitat which they provided for unknown numbers of species that now have been compromised or eliminated. I don't believe that this is how America wants to be seen around the world nor do I believe that most Americans who are aware and who think about the environment want to treat their environment. Too much these days has been relegated to money and while we are able to request we all know it takes hundreds if not thousands of years to create a boreal wilderness. Old growth wilderness is very important for our planet in terms of the carbon sequestration and also as home for so many different species. That's respect our older forests and take them off the shopping block and. And while we do this we need to take a look at what companies like Procter and Gamble are doing in the Canadian boreal forests. We know we need to be done. We know that money is a problem when it comes to the environment because it gets in the way of doing the right thing. So let's take a real serious look at this legislators and policy makers and do what's best for the states the country and the world in the long run.
