Comments: Owners of JHMR consistently support climate change denying candidates and elected officials while pushing pseudo-science ideology, while at the same time cite climate change and science as the reason for needed "upgrades" to the resort. Should the feds enable this type of conduct for some wealthy shareholders at the expense of all of the species that depend on these trees?

No, you shouldn't enable this development for some "wind hold" issues. If they want less wind, and fewer climate related impacts, perhaps require some actual accountability by the resort in showing that it really does understand these issues before approving this project.

This is too ironic for even my 7 yr old to understand.

Thank you
