Comments: Dear Sir or Madam:

For the past several years I have spent a significant time away from my law practice addressing environment and wildlife concerns on behalf of environment associations. However I consider this a small price for preserving wilderness to be as pristine as possible while allowing people to enjoy them to the fullest extent. indeed, people enjoy wilderness and its animals because these places and animals are beautiful and different.

However, they are also extremely fragile. For this reason I respectfully but strongly urge you to limit the number of permits. Could you also kindly provide a public record of who obtained these permits, for how long, and for which purposes. I also recommend that all permits be viable for a shorter time period. This entire record should be easily accessible on your website and updated as necessary.

People love outfitters and guides, but the number should be limited so animals and plants are not damaged or harassed. IN particular, bears are drawn to these campsites in remote areas; there is no place to further remove offending bears and so they must be shot.

We also do not wish to hike or otherwise view the scenery i littered with what is admittedly the refuse of commercial businesses.

Sincerely,

Adrienne B. Naumann, Eq.
