Comments: I'm not sure there's any point to having rules if you suspend them for some applications.

There's so little Wilderness left that the public has a right to input into how these places are 'used'.

There should not be applicants who are given exceptional status to bypass protections we thought were in place.

Climate change will disrupt natural systems further limiting habitat for all the life in this wilderness. We need to be even more diligent and strict about the numbers of people and their methods of travel and camping. The outfitters are making money on our heritage places. I have no objection to a limited number of the hardiest souls enjoying these places if they avoid disturbing what the rest of us just want to know is preserved.
