Comments: North America has a fraction of the primary forests it once supported. If we fail to protect remaining old-growth and allow mature forests to age into old-growth, we are fundamentally failing to address a key impact of the climate and biodiversity crises at home.

In order to deliver on President Biden's Executive Order promises, there must be real protections for both mature and old-growth trees - including from the threat of logging and 'inappropriate management' techniques by the agencies.

We should not be selling old-growth trees on public lands. You can manage these forests effectively without selling those trees. End of story. This agency is meant to be stewards of the land, not in the pockets of corporations and those at the top. The people need this.

It really seems like at the end of the day this is a bipartisan issues. Why would we withhold from protecting these lands for our children? It is beyond time that the management of our national forests reflects their actual values: clean air and drinking water, species habitat, space for cultural practices, outdoor recreation and tourism - the list goes on.
