Subject: Phase out ANICLA cabins in Wilderness and leave this policy unchanged -- Special Uses Handbook, Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act Cabin Policy #ORMS-3666

To USFS Chief Randy Moore and USFS Alaska Regional Forester David Schmid,

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

"A thing is right when it tends to preserve the integrity, stability, and beauty of the biotic community. It is wrong when it tends otherwise."
