Comments: Back in the 80's, the government was very generous to people who had illegally built cabins on Federal lands. The idea of the original builders getting to live there throughout their lifetime, but their heirs having to vacate the property seems fair to me. I don't see how it's in the best interest of the forest service or the people of this nation to have the cabins desecrating the wilderness forever. Those cabins need to go. The heirs need to be thankful for what they got, and not demand more.
