Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

This change would mean that these structures could remain for generations. That goes against the intent of areas designated as Wilderness. Please reconsider this change...the original policy was more than fair for all concerned. Thank you.
