Comments: I am a former volunteer wilderness ranger for the US Forest Service, a Leave No Trace master trainer, and a guide/naturalist in the Greater Yellowstone. I can assure you that I know much about wilderness and its value to our country. A very simple reading of the Wilderness Act will show that cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins. This was the original intent and must be adhered to. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.
