Comments: I am commenting to oppose any change in the permitting rules for ANILCA cabins. It seems obvious to me that cabins are not compatible with Wilderness, and though they may have been grandfathered in the permits should properly expire with the original owners.

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.
