Comments: Do local records indicate who owns the cabin?? Are they occupied?? Then give notice to owner in person for upcoming eviction and cabin destruction; or put written notice and give them deadline to vacate.

Other wise, apologies for use of boilerplate, but yes, cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.
