Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

There are plenty of other locations to enjoy Mother Nature. Leave what is left of our wilderness to the wild animals who call it home. Haven't humans destroyed enough of this planet.
