Comments: I don't know what bonehead thought this one up, because it's not like the disappearance and pollution of green spaces isn't contributing to the global point of no return, but on the scale of bad and stupid ideas, this is a solid ten.

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.
