Comments: Dear Forest Service Personnel,

Phasing out ANICLA cabins is necessary to protecting and supporting Wilderness areas. We need wilderness areas to remain wild. Wilderness areas are sanctuaries for animals, plants and the human spirit. Allowing private cabins in these areas disturbs and disrupts the forest environment.

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.
