Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act. the Wilderness should be kept Wilderness. It is unnecessary for humans to reside or vacation in areas that should be set aside for wildlife to live naturally. We have already encroached too much into wilderness areas, and we need to just stop.

Thank you for your consideration.
