Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (ANILCA) was passed by Congress in 1980 to preserve and protect nationally significant public land in Alaska for present and future generations. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.
