Title:

Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

It has always been the original intent to return all lands covered by ANILCA and the Wilderness Act to common public ownership and rules of use, with no private ownership or exceptions.

Please do not change the policy.

As your own motto states: CARING FOR THE LAND and SERVING PEOPLE...ALL the people, as well as the land and ALL living things that inhabit the land.

Please honor the spirit and intent of our SHARED guardianship, ownership, common use, and maintenance of our public lands, especially Wilderness.

Thank you.
