

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 3/8/2024 7:43:57 PM

First name: Pat

Last name: Wolff

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Cabins and permanent living quarters are not supposed to be allowed in Wilderness-- why might the Forest Service pretend that in Alaska it's OK? Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.