Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act. Please continue phasing out use of cabins and remove at end of their time. Wild needs to stay wild. There is already so little territory for many wild species and having people consistently in this space will disrupt that.
