Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. Wilderness is defined as "an uncultivated, uninhabited and inhospitable region". Uninhabited is the key word here. Cabins are the antithesis of wilderness, defined as "uninhabited, and inhospitable". The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

Thank you.
