

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 3/8/2024 8:33:37 PM

First name: Mary

Last name: McGeary

Organization:

Title:

Comments:

The Alaska Wilderness is one of the few places animals roam freely. I hope the U.S. Forest Service will not let cabins and other buildings start to take that away.

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.