Comments: If my family was to visit a designated wilderness (visited Alaska once), we would all be extremely disappointed. We never see any structures in any wilderness areas we've visited, unless they are very, very old. These cabins were never meant to persist in the wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act. Cabins are for parks and not wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent.
