

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 3/8/2024 9:09:49 PM

First name: Nancy

Last name: Krebs

Organization:

Title:

Comments: While I understand cabins on public land had historic use, the 1964 Wilderness Act makes clear that these spaces are to be managed to keep them wild & untrammelled by man. Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.