Comments: Cabins have no place in designated Wilderness. USDA must must let stand its policy and phase out ANILCA cabins per the agency's original intention. These structures were never meant to be permanent. Removing such cabins is the right thing to do to maintain this Wilderness area. Reversing this intent and allowing their presence in perpetuity is the wrong decision and would undermine ANILCA as well as the Wilderness Act.

As an American citizen who highly values our nation's wild places, I call on USDA to honor the original plan to phase out these obtrusive, unnatural structures that are spoiling the beauty of this unique and irreplaceable Wilderness. Thank you for your consideration.
