Comments: Dear decision makers of the Forest Service,
Please obey the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (ANILCA) to preserve and protect nationally significant public land in Alaska for present and future generations and protect the wilderness in Alaska by phasing out the use of the unauthorized cabins.

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

Thank you,

Beth Cohen
