Comments: The U.S. Forest Service should leave its policy unchanged and phase out Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act cabins as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness. Allowing these cabins to continue undermines both the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act and the Wilderness Act.

Please phase these cabins out and preserve Wilderness. There isn't very much of it left to enjoy in peace and solitude. Cabins are available to rent at many National and State Parks already. Don't need more of them located in designated Wilderness areas.
