Comments:

I have traveled extensively in the wild areas of ANILKA lands and the experiences I've had convince me of the importance of keeping wilderness areas wild. This is especially important, given the dramatic changes coming to the northern areas of Alaska due to climate change. One thing I know, for sure: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness.

The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

Thank you
