Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness and those in question shouldn't have been allowed in the first place. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act. That this policy change is even under consideration appears to indicate that profiteering entities are pressing the Forest Service and these overtures should be denied out of hand when they conflict with existing legislation.
