Comments: To me, wilderness means nothing but that - wilderness. With the ever-shrinking acreage of our national parks and wilderness due to human and corporate encroachment, the last thing any remaining wild areas need are cabins and fewer regulations.

Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

Again, please do not change the current policy and phase out ANILCA cabins so that our wilderness areas remain wild as nature intended.

Thank you.
