Comments: Please reconsider the proposed changes. Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act.

Wilderness lands mean the lands are to be free of development so the wild can remain unencumbered by any forms of civilization. Thank you for reading y comments.
