Comments: I would like to register my objections to the logging of big trees (up to 40 inches) and the use of herbicides to control brush in this plan. Big trees are beautiful, regal, rare, and need protection. One might conclude that the forest service's plan benefits local lumber mills rather than the forests. In addition, pouring herbicides on acres of brush is just plain insane. We drink the water downstream and the forest creatures cannot possible benefit from these chemicals. They only benefit chemical companies. Why not allow grazing or use mechanical means to reduce fuel? I think it is largely agreed upon the RoundUp, which is what I guess we're talking about, is not harmless. The increase of it's use correlates with increases in Autism...hmmm?

The forest service's mission is to preserve these wild places for animals and humans, not to spoil them with chemicals or sell them to greedy companies. What will you tell your children? Did you stand for the future or sell out.
