Comments: The proposed limitations, driven by special interest groups, prioritize their agenda over the well-being of the public and directly contradict the Forest Service's mission. Despite the majority of recreational users, including motorized ones, responsibly adhering to regulations, further restrictions only worsen congestion and favor those with deep pockets. This undermines the true purpose of public lands and fails to support local economies. True stewardship means upholding the Forest Service's commitment to "Caring for the Land and Serving People" by allowing responsible, inclusive recreation for all on our shared landscapes. I would also love to see maps that are user friendly and are easier to navigate and understand. Myself and others have spent so much time trying to find correct maps, that led to a lot of confusion and time consumption. In order to make a more informed decision to reflect how I feel about limiting the access to land, I need correct data to form those opinions, which the public does not have.
