Comments: There's a fine line between accommodating recreation and promoting it and the FS needs to do some serious soul searching to determine where that line is. The rapidly increasing numbers of people in the last remaining wild places in this country is unsustainable for wildlife and all land agencies will have to come to grips with that sooner rather than later. This project sounds like yet another low bow to the recreation industry at large on the order of "glamping" or other attempts to make the recreating public feel more comfortable in otherwise wild places. Going into mountains incurs risk and people have accepted that reality and its inherent challenges for generations.
