Comments: Our planet is barreling toward mass extinction -- including our own. We as a community need to let our trees reach old growth stage. We know now that it is the oldest trees that hold the most carbon. I am amazed that the Forest Service would even consider as massive and destructive a project as Telephone Gap when President Biden's choice was to find a way to save the old growth trees (of which we have very few, especially in New England) -- and the Forest Service has not even completed their process of deciding how to implement this change of course. Once you cut down trees, it is game over for my generation of humans. For the love of our planet, stop this disastrous decision.
