Comments: I think privately owned and operated ventures like this on public land need to stop being considered. I am sure the money from permits and such are enticing, but they go against what most believe to be the purpose and intent of public land. The possible outcomes from ventures like this in the future seem to point towards losing access for the public. This area has been public access for decades and should continue to be so for generations to come. It is possibly the coolest place I have ever been to. It needs no alterations, additions, or changes to remain the coolest place ever. Why should some private company get to profit from a place like this, I see no benefits as a tax payer.
