Comments: Alternative A - Do nothing. No logging on public lands. Period. KEEP the TREES STANDING.

We should not be propping up the private logging industry with public property when it's exactly their activities that are contributing to the extreme fluctuations in weather patterns and dooming the ecosystems that we depend on.

Given the deafening wake up call of the recent disastrous flooding in our state, it's baffling that the USFS is still promoting "forest health" through its destruction.

We need to secure undisturbed public lands, safeguard water systems, and ensure the preservation of biodiversity, through undisturbed, mature forests. Cutting trees is cutting our own throats - and those of our loved ones and our children. How many more floods, species extinction, washed out roads, bridges, lost crop land, late freezes wiping out a whole season's fruit harvests, ruined homes and livelihoods will it take before you realize the chance we're squandering, you're squandering, to preserve our natural world, our only home, and just KEEP THE TREES STANDING?!
