Comments: There are extensively used trails around Chittenden Reservoir and from there to South Pond, North Pond and to Camel's Hump. Because these trails are used extensively for recreation and sight seeing, I recommend that they have the same set backs against logging activity as the Long Trail has in that area.

Because there is a push for more carbon capture around the world by leaving certain areas unlogged where it doesn't seriously affect the local economy, I recommend not logging at all in the roadless study area that is depicted on the map. It was picked as a possible roadless area because it was considered special in many ways. I realize that this carbon capture is only for several decades, but it gives time for the development of more renewable energy and energy saving science to be developed.
