Comments: I use our public lands in multiple uses, from hiking, snowshoeing, snowmobiling, hunting, fishing etc. I don't seem to understand why there is such a push to ban snowmobiling in any of our public lands (wilderness or non-wilderness). It is not only common sense but it is a fact that snowmobiling leaves zero footprint once the snow melts. I have seen so much damage to our public lands due to over use with horses and hiking, from trail damage to off trail damage, not to mention the litter and piles of human waste. Out of all the uses of our public lands, one of the smallest percentage is snowmobiling. As I said earlier it leaves not footprint once the snow melts.
