Comments: North Sand Vegetation Management #65540

My initial reaction is that extremely extensive study, planning and comment periods should be undertaken for any project in these environs. If any project is actually undertaken, then there should be very close monitoring. Given that water, air and sound move across terrain, the environs should be considered. Ingress and egress also can have an impact on the environs. These environs include designated botanical areas, a roadless area and inventoried potential wilderness and wild & scenic river lands as well as existing roads probably inadequate for logging traffic. The Black Hills National Forest is already extensively degraded by too many roads. Should preservation of nature have priority over logging volume in this location?
