Comments: I think we need to hault this project and all projects in this category and completely reevaluate how these projects are conducted before they're allowed to proceed. It does not appear that the forest service nor their third party logging companies are abiding by the regulations that they themselves have set. If this truly is a project with the primary goal of being ecological restoration, and if it has federal funding available to help pay for it, income from log sales should be a byproduct of the project, not a driving purpose or need. If this project was actually what it says it is then we wouldn't see massive old growth trees being cut down, and we wouldn't see the ecology of these endangered old growth forests being tarnished. Oh and all that talk about forest fire prevention is completely false. What they are doing by taking out the large fire retardant trees, essentially clear cutting, leaving giant snag piles and tons of dry fuel on the exposed ground is actually making fire dangers worse, not better. Please for the love of our public lands please stop putting money into these absurd disguised logging operations and put it towards actually helping people harden their homes from wildfires.
