Comments: I object to this mining proposal whole heartedly. This current clean energy boondoggle is contradicting the same values that are supposed to protect the environment. No one is perusing a plan to reuse already extracted resources to build a sustainable solar grid: solar roads, solar buildings, and other infrastructure in places that are already constructed. Instead, it is seeking to destroy wildlife refuges in the name of clean energy. This is overconsumption of minerals and natural resources on steroids. Don't let them sucker folks with the promise of jobs either. Most of the work goes to out of state contactors. It won't help the locals at all with job growth, just pollute our water and ruin our environment and create division. When the mines close, and all the minerals go to China, we will be left with a billion-dollar clean-up. We have existing mines and the means to extract other resources from recycling materials. We need to stand united against all these mine proposals and other assaults on our environment.
